BROADCASTING) -- November is Breast Cancer Awareness Month. It is a time when women are encouraged to be aware of the symptoms of breast cancer and seek prompt medical care if the symptoms are detected. Holly Leatherman knew she should have been more aware, but there was a lot going on. Her daughter Natalie was just starting high school and her husband was working in Mississippi. They were all busy. Sally Midgley Sally Midgley is a British comic artist, and animator best known for her work with Osamu Tezuka's Phoenix Comics. She also drew the 1980s Doctor Who comics and the 2000 AD story "Turner" (with John Higgins), featuring Frank Cottrell Boyce and the previous incarnation of the Eighth Doctor. She has also been a key part of the comics industry's Women in Comics Initiative, which seeks to foster greater opportunities for female artists.

Biography Early life and career Midgley was born in 1950 and attended South

She began her career in the early 1970s after studying fine art at Kingston Polytechnic, and she later attained a Masters in Fine Art at the Royal College of Art. She initially worked for Osamu Tezuka's Phoenix magazine as an assistant editor, cover artist and colourist. This led to a relationship with the company, and Midgley worked on the Phoenix series Albedo, Phoenix and Phoenix Okami. She also produced the 1986 Sambo comic Sambo Comic Fights the Dragon, using the pseudonym "Sally Doom". In the 1980s she moved into the world of Doctor Who, working on the comics adaptations of the TV series. Her first work was Doctor Who Magazine #89 (with Peter David), published in 1990; it included a four-page strip drawn by Midgley, entitled "The Great Circus of the Heavens." She then contributed to the Doctor Who revival comic strips in the same magazine, starting with a four-page story (with Gary Russell) entitled
